Perseus lived alone with his mother. His father had died when he was a baby. The King of the land was evil and nobody liked him. He wanted to marry Perseus' mother. However, Perseus told the King that it was not possible. The King was angry and thought of a plan to get rid of Perseus. 'Bring me the head of the monster Medusa' said the King, 'and I will not bother your mother again.'

Medusa and her sisters, the Gorgons, were terrifying indeed. Instead of hair, they had snakes coming out of their heads. If anyone looked at their faces, then they would become a stone.

Perseus needed help to defeat Medusa. He went to see a wise man. The man gave Perseus a shield, which was just like a mirror. Next, he gave him a crystal sword strong enough to cut off the monster's head. The wise man told Perseus that he would also need some flying sandals, a helmet to make him invisible and a silver bag to put Medusa's head in. The wise man said that Perseus should go and find the three witches that lived at Mount Atlas. They would give him the objects that he needed.

At first, the witches would not help Perseus. Then Perseus noticed that they only had one eye between them and he quickly grabbed it. He refused to give it back until they agreed to help him. The witches finally gave in; they got their eye back in exchange for the helmet, the sandals and the silver bag. Perseus strapped on the sandals and flew to the Gorgons cave. He put on his helmet and now he was invisible to the Gorgons. Medusa did not notice Perseus flying into the cave. Perseus drew his crystal sword and confronted Medusa. He remembered that he must not look at her because he would turn to stone. Therefore, he used his shield as a mirror and, guided by Athena (the goddess of war and wisdom) severed Medusa's head. Medusa was finally dead and Perseus had the head in the silver bag to prove it.

Perseus returned to the evil King. The King did not believe that Medusa was dead. 'Show me the head!' he demanded. Perseus took the head from the silver bag and the evil King was instantly turned into a stone! He had looked at the face of Medusa! Perseus, his mother and everyone in the land rejoiced.
